Right from the beginning of 'Claudine at School' I was struck by the reality of scenes: we are taken right there, to this rural French school in 1900, complete with the cheeky, flirtatious, rebellious schoolgirls, chief amongst whom is Claudine, the narrator, based on Colette herself, as these books are semi-autobiographical.

I have The Complete Claudine collection of 4 novellas, but I will only finish the first for now, Claudine at School. I enjoyed the outspoken, rebelliously playful Claudine. As a teenage student, Claudine feuds and flirts with her fully-grown teachers as well as delights the reader with charmingly critical observations about her surroundings.

Colette, prodded by her first husband, Willy, began her writing career with Claudine at School, which catapulted the young author into instant, sensational success. Among the most autobiographical of Colette's works, these four novels are dominated by the child-woman Claudine, whose strength,...

The Complete Claudine: Claudine at School; Claudine in ...

I re-read Colette's Claudine at School; Colette was a self-mythologizer of Greek proportions, and all us lady writers today could learn a thing or two from her swagger. I binge-read every E.M. Forster novel, and realized how key turns in each book hinge on women; characters who may be small in deed or acknowledgment but whose impact looms large.
